POETRY.

VENETIAN FUNERAL.
A sound is heard o'er the surges dim—
A deep and mournful sound;
And the distant notes of a funeral hymn
Swell solemnly around:
As they bear the dead to the lonely grave,
Faint sighs the chant o'er the moonless wave—
Mater Dei! Jesu, save!
Oh! young and fair is the form they bear
In her cold and spotless shroud;
Like a flower the hue which her young cheeks wear
That the blighting storm hath bowed!
As they wait for the dead on her funeral bier,
Deep swells the chant—and still near—more near—
Mater Dei! Jesu, hear!
Oh! long and vain shall her orphan child,
In his sad and silent home,
Still list for the voice of his mother mild
They bear to the dreary tomb:
As faint and fast o'er the midnight tide
The lingering notes of the mourners glide—
Mater Dei! Jesu, guide!

EXTRACTS FROM THE LONDON NEW MONTHLY.

Highland funerals.—
I have heard a young Highlander in the rank of a gentleman say, that he never spent a pleasanter day than at his grandmother's funeral; for the mourners had as much whiskey and dancing as they could set their faces to. At his death, Laird of—, in Argyleshire, left a beautiful young widow, of course inconsolable for his loss. After the burial and banquet, clansmen and clanswomen, attended by the piper and fiddler, convened for a dance in the castle hall, resolving to mitigate their grief with the Highland fling—when unexpectedly the widow herself came in, all weeps and tears, with the tip of her nose scarcely peeping from her crape cap—and she seated herself mournfully on a bench. The gentleman who was to lead down the dance thought that he could not in good breeding ask any other lady than the mistress of the house to stand up with him, and with a deep sigh she consented. He then asked the disconsolate woman to name the spring, i. e. the tune she would wish to be played. "Oh," she said, let it be a light spring, for I have a heavy heart.

Jewish superstition.—
When a man dies, they believe that the devil stands in ambush before the house in order to get possession of the corpse on its way to its last abode. As the rabbi, however, surrounds it all the way to interment, his infernal majesty is cowed by their presence; but still he follows the procession, in hopes of finding some favourable opportunity, or of slipping into the grave along with the defunct. When the body, therefore, is near the opened grave, the bearers suddenly retreat with it to a certain distance, and a rabbi attending them throws some gold pieces as far as he can in different directions. The devil, who is by this time either in the grave or near it, is tempted by his avarice to go and pick up the money; and whilst he is thus employed, the corpse is hurried back to the tomb and earth thrown over it. One day that I talked about this custom to a Moor, who has a big old hatred of the poor Israelites, I asked him if it was not unlike a Jew to throw away his money? "Ah, yes," he said; "but it is very like a Jew to cheat the devil." In the burials of females this scattering of money is never practised: Satan, it is alleged, has trouble enough upon his hands to wish quitting hold of a woman.

Persian method of dying the hair.—
Let the reader, therefore, who is dissatisfied with the colour of his hair, mix some fine powder of henna with water, till it acquires the consistency of a paste. This being got ready, let him scrub away at his head with soap and warm water, and then with warm water alone, till the hair is completely clean, and every particle of the soap removed. Daub then the head with the henna paste, in such a way that every individual hair receives its full share; and, having allowed this application to remain on for an hour or two, wash it off with warm water, and clear away the dust with a fine comb: your hair then, courteous reader, will be a beautiful red. Next apply, in a similar manner, a similar paste of indigo leaves, dried and powdered; and after it is washed off, your hair will be a deep and delightful black. The Persians usually perform this operation when in the bath, and they renew it every six weeks or two months.

Origin of Peter the Great's love of the sea.—
The third village is Ismailoff, where some persons suppose Peter was born: I say suppose, for no one can tell with certainty where Peter the Great was either born or married. Rummaging one day in some storehouse of the palace, he found a small English boat, and tried it on the little river Yousa. Growing bolder, he launched it on the little lake, or wide ditch, whichever it may be termed, which surrounds the palace. Thus gradually he acquired a passion for the sea—exchanging, in that graduated scale which he loved, the river for the lake, the lake for the ocean. The origin of all was, perhaps, nothing more than idleness and boyish curiosity; for till his fourteenth year, he is said to have been so terrified at the sight of water that he could not be persuaded to cross a river, except in a close carriage. However this may be, the idea of naval greatness took possession of his mind, to the exclusion of almost every other; and determined one day to be master of a fleet, he appointed an admiral before he possessed a single vessel!

Anecdote to be introduced in conversation.—
You may, of course, introduce the story of the aspirant for political office, who, having constantly and continuously haunted the great red house in Lincoln's in fields, while tenanted by the Duke of Newcastle, and had been from day to day fed upon expectation, at last said to the Premier, with a look of unclouded satisfaction, "Well, my Lord Duke, I have got a place at last."—"I rejoice to hear it," said his Grace, pressing his hand affectionately, "not ill pleased at having got rid of his periodical visitor; 'what place is it?'"—"A place inside the York coach," said the squire; "I'm tired of waiting for any other, so I have secured that, and am going home to my wife and family, to see what I can do for myself."

Hogg's courtship.—
On the Shepherd's first visit to Edinburgh after this meeting, he found his future bride residing with her relative, Mr Gray; she was accompanied by a cousin, who, to much beauty, had the prospect, which was eventually realized, of inheriting a considerable fortune. After dinner, when the young ladies retired to the drawing-room, the Shepherd was asked what he thought of Miss Susan P.—He answered, "Margaret's the lass for me." The worthy Shepherd was more pleased with the cheerful smile, the dark hair, and the black eyes of his own Margaret, than with the more courtly manners and brighter prospects of her wealthier cousin, and he never afterwards had reason to repent of the preference which he then showed.

BOSTON MORNING POST.

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1836.

The Surplus.—Mr Webster is for dividing the surplus revenue. It would be better to fortify the sea-coast, with what means we now have—and prevent any further accumulations by reducing the duties upon imported articles. The government ought to require specie to be paid for all the public lands sold—or perhaps confine the sales to actual settlers; and thus shut out foreign speculators. Let also Mr Grundy's bill to purchase the right to carry the mail &c. on Rail Roads, pass. But to divide the surplus among the States in the form of loans without interest, it strikes us, as liable to constitutional objections as to give directly the same sums to the States. To collect money from the people, simply for the purpose of distributing it, again, is worse than labor lost—it is downright robbery to those who get less than they pay.

It is a remarkable fact, and one which ought to be seriously considered, in order to understand the means and the difficulty of moral reformation, that a longer time is requisite to enable us to conquer an evil habit, than to acquire one. If this remark is true when applied to particular habits, it is true in its application to all our habits in mass, or to the general character. Hence it may be inferred, that it would require a longer period of time to obtain a new character—by which we mean a new set of habits and principles—than was spent in the formation of our present character. It would not be far from the truth to assert, that after a man has lived to middle age in the practice of vice, his reformation is impossible. The influence of powerful motives may produce an external reformation in his character—may cause him to pay homage to virtue—but he will still possess a hankering after old gratifications, which, under certain circumstances, he could not resist. The reformation of a rake is always more apparent than real.

Sheriff of Suffolk.—The Courier, in alluding to the recommendation of Mr Eveleth for the office of Sheriff, says—

"Courtesy to another individual,—one whose gentlemanlike deportment on all occasions is a sure indication of benevolent feelings, and whose familiarity with the duties and responsibilities of the office of Sheriff, are qualifications that entitle him to favourable remembrance—induces us to mention that HENRY H. HUGGESSON, the oldest Deputy Sheriff of the county, is a candidate for the office of Sheriff."

It appears that the celebrated Thames Tunnel is exactly eighteen inches longer than it was eleven years ago—if it progresses at the same rate, which will be completed first, the Tunnel or the Banker Hill Monument. "We pause for a reply."

The Baltimore papers are complaining because the State only allows $50 for printing the laws—this is more than twice as much as the printers receive in Massachusetts for the same work.

S. T. Coleridge.—A class of writers has lately arisen in England and France, who are imitators of the German metaphysicians, Kant and Schelling—the founders of the Transcendental Philosophy—who have a multitude of admirers on this side of the Atlantic. The chief of this class are Victor Cousin, in France, and the late Samuel Taylor Coleridge, in England. This school of writers may be called metaphysical rhapsodists. A more unintelligible writer than S. T. Coleridge cannot be found among English authors of any celebrity. What rational being, save one who is endowed with what Coleridge believed himself to possess—a faculty that is higher than reason—that is, a faculty which enables one to understand absurdities, and to explain impossibilities—who, but one of these gifted mortals, can attach any definite meaning to one half of the writings of Coleridge, either in prose or verse? Yet it is the fashion to cry up this author as one of the greatest geniuses of modern times; while those passages from his works, which are called likewise a brilliant poet—he was really a grand versifier, and an extraordinary rhapsodist. No writer, in our humble opinion, for the last century, has by his influence and example, done more to corrupt the purity of English literature. All his originality savors of opium, and all his learning of scholastic pedantry.

COMMON SENSE.

Mr and Mrs Barrett will take their last benefit for the season this evening, at the Tremont, when will be presented the new, popular, and very successful Comedy of Hints for Charlatans, and the interesting Melo Drama of The Magpie and The Maid. The previous benefits of these distinguished and meritorious members of the Tremont corps dramatique, were not so productive as the beneficiaries had a right to expect, or at all commensurate with their just claims upon the public. If we would retain the services of those who possess the ability and the disposition to keep the drama at that point of elevation at which it can only be the source of refined intellectual enjoyment, and creditable to the cultivated taste of our community, we must extend to them some better evidence of our approbation than mere words of commendation; and for such, we hope, will be the case this evening. Let the fair lady whose beauty is equal to the most impassioned conceptions of the great poet whose imaginary creations she has so often personated, and he whose versatile genius is always in active exercise for the gratification of his auditors, witness to-night the cheering sight of a FULL HOUSE.

May Morning was one of the pleasantest mornings we have had since the opening of Spring, and well as it improved by the dewiness of Boston, old and young—grave and gay. Before sunrise the multitude was in motion—every horse within a mile of the State House was engaged on Saturday—carriages of all descriptions were in high demand, and the mighty army moved forward at dawn to the grand attack upon the unoffending, modest, new-born flowers. The one at Savin Hill held out for some time, but finally surrendered upon condition that it should be treated as a prisoner of war; that at Mount Auburn fell a victim to Gen. Frost upon the night of the 30th ult., and was found dead upon the ground, while the third and last one, entrenched on Bunker Hill, was taken alive after a desperate struggle, and brought into the city just as the first bells were ringing for church. These three mortal enemies to the peace and safety of the metropolis of New England having been swept from the face of the earth, its inhabitants are now secure from danger, and may repose in peace. The different sections of the grand army behaved in the most gallant manner during the whole contest, and although many were wounded, none were killed—quite.

From Texas, we have nothing but rumors. There was a report at Louisville on the 20th instant, that Houston had met and defeated Santa Anna—and it was rumored in New Orleans on the 13th, that the companies of U. S. troops lately sent from Jefferson barracks to Fort Jessup, to protect the western frontiers, had deserted to the Texan army. It was also stated that Matagorda had been deserted and destroyed by the Texans, and that they have resolved to abandon the whole country west of the Brazos, at least for the present.

The style of typography is uncommonly excellent.

Mr Graham gives a general, and his closing, Lecture, at the Odion to-morrow evening. The returns of members to the Spanish cortes show a great increase of strength to M. Mendizabale's ministry. Cabrera, the Carlist brigand, is said to have shot eighteen ladies of the queen's party in revenge for the death of his mother, who, it appears, was shot, not because she was his mother, but because she was a very active and skillful spy.

The long presiding negotiations for the recognition, by Spain, of the independence of the South American Republics, have fallen to the ground. The plenipotentiaries from America are firm in their resolve not to purchase this recognition by the payment of a sum of money into the treasury of Spain. They have left Madrid, "hollowed bound."

LIVERPOOL MARKET. March 25.—Our Cotton Market continues in a very healthy state, with a good extent of business doing, and at hardening prices; Americans have gone off freely at the extreme quotations of last week, Brazil 4d to 4d, and Egyptian 1d to 1d higher. The Demeraras, at auction, brought at extravagant prices, say 1d to 1d higher than previous sales by private contract. The imports are 15,345 bales. CONGRESS.

Senate, Wednesday, April 27.—The amendments increasing the appropriations to the Navy Bill were concurred in, and the bill ordered to be engrossed by a vote of 35 to 15 (Mr Hill). The Florida War Bill was passed, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Distributive Land Bill. Mr Benton moved its postponement for a week, to take up appropriation bills, which was negatived. Various propositions and amendments were offered, and considerable debate had on the subject, when the question, shall this bill be engrossed for a third reading, was taken and carried—yeas 25, nays 21, and the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the subject of the Deposite Banks was postponed for a week, after some debate. The House refused to suspend the rules to enable Mr Thompson to bring forward his resolution relative to Texas. An attempt was made to suspend the rules relative to the admission of Arkansas and Michigan, which was yeas 124, nays 69, and not being two thirds, was lost.

The Army and Navy Appropriation Bills then came up. Mr Cantelero explained his views at length. After further debate the House adjourned.

Thursday, April 28.—In the Senate—The Vice President laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Navy stating that one and a half millions annually would only be required in addition to the naval service. Considerable debate was had on a proposition to authorize Mr Persico to complete a group of statues in marble, for the Rotunda, in which an attempt was made to give the preference to native artists. The proposition was finally adopted. Mr Ruggles made a long report on the Patent Laws, which, after a debate, was ordered to be printed. The Naval and Florida War Bill was then read, and passed. The Distributive Land Bill then came up, was debated, but the Senate adjourned without taking a vote on the same.

In the House, the Deposite Bank question came up for discussion, but, one o'clock, the House took up the Army Appropriation Bill, which was debated at length. Mr Mason, of New York, spoke an hour; he was compelled to give way from exhaustion. Mr McKee followed. The Navy Appropriation Bill from the Senate, and the amendments, referred to the committee. The House then adjourned.

POLICE COURT.

Serjeant.—A little the hardest she-captain, or rather she-dragon, ever shown up at the Boston Police Court, was the widow Elizabeth Tenley, who was brought in on Saturday forenoon, charged with being a common drunkard, and breaking the windows of a Mr Ryan, in Ann street. She was in decent fix, and had with her a pretty little son, about seven years of age, who sat close by her side, and, unconscious that he was a prisoner, amused himself with playing with the strings of her bonnet. The little innocent's ill-timed smiles, so untaught to her situation, struck her to the heart, and, yielding to her bursting anguish, she clutched him to her bosom, and bitterly bewailed his fate, as "a poor orphan, with niver a parent to stand up for it." She might have added, that one of his parents—she who was at that moment overwhelming him with her vociferous grief—was a great deal worse than dead. Her maternal lamentations became quite uproarious, and seeming to gather intensity in volume, and variety in execution, she was sent into an underground cell, to cool off; but though she could not melt the marble hearts of the functionaries with her tears, she succeeded in piercing the granite foundation walls, and splitting the ears of the people in attendance, by her alternate roaring and shrieking. In about two hours it was supposed, that she had belloved herself sober, and she was brought up, arraigned, and entered upon her defence:—

Elizabeth—Jidge, I would ask what I have done, and who has any thing to say to me?

Magistrate—You are charged with getting intoxicated, by Mr Ryan, the complainant, whom you disturb when you are under the influence of liquor.

Eliz.—Ryan, is it you that says that same—you! you ugly looking thafe, you ought to be hung long before you came to this country for robbery!

Ryan—Place yer honor she came to my house, and—

Eliz.—Och, ye unhangd felon! you're a Catalick, and must kiss the book.

Mag.—Mr Ryan, do you believe the oath binding in the form you have taken it?

Ryan—Yes.

Eliz.—Do you mane to say to my face, that you iver saw me drunk?

Ryan—I niver saw you sober.

Eliz.—Sober or not sober, I could always take care of you, you blackguard.

Ryan—May it please yer honor, she comes down from Lowell every once in a little while, and raises a disturbance—this morning, I suppose she had taken some spirits, and did not know—

Eliz.—I have always spirits enough in my mind for you, you notorious villain.

Mag.—You must not interrupt the witness.—You shall have a chance to speak, when he has told his story.

Eliz.—You'll excuse me, jidge—I'm nothing but a poor weak woman, and I don't know how to keep my temper, when I hear that scoundrel lie so; and if I had a hundred dollars, I'd give it all just to have him where I could give him one good dressing—[doubling up her fist, and shaking it at him, like one who knew how to use it.]

Mag.—You may ask him any questions, or I'll put them for you.

Eliz.—Thank ye jidge—will ye? Well then, jist ask him, how often he gets drunk himself, and how long it may be since he knocked his wife down the cellar, all because she is a Christian and Protestant, and the poor crathure.—That's the kind of question for him, but may hap he'll no like to answer them, I'm thinking.

Mag.—We shall not require him to answer them—where is the next witness?

2d Witness—I never saw her drunk till this morning, when she behaved so shockingly to Mr Ryan—he tried to get rid of her, and drive her away.

Eliz.—Jidge, dont believe a word that man says—it must all goe for nothing, for he is a Catalick, and I didn't see him kiss the book.

Mag.—Mr Reid, I believe you know something of this woman.

Reid—Yes, yer honor, I took her once, when she was sent to the House of Correction, for stealing a bundle from the cars.

Eliz.—Mr Reid, you're under oath, and will you jist be kind enough to tell the truth, if you can. Did you iver see me in any sort of fever of rum?

Reid—O sartin! May it please yer honor, she was furious drunk when she was taken before; and it is true, as Mr Ryan says, she comes to Boston occasionally, and kicks up a row with any of her old acquaintances, that she happens to meet with.

Eliz.—Jidge, when is it to be my turn to speak? I can't keep my temper much longer!

Mag.—You may say what you have to say now.

Eliz.—Well then, jintleman of the jury, and all the other jintlemen here present at this prisent time, I know nothing about the lah! but the truth is this, so help me G—, and I'm ready to kiss the book to it, though I am a persecuted Protestant. I would be calling to see an old gossip of mine, who lives near by Mr Ryan, the murdering thafe, that stands there; and after taking a small sip for my head, I came out, but jist as I reached the door, I heard a loud snarl, and I was very much startled by the falling of some glass, and I ran up into the house to see what the matter would be. Ryan came up after me, and would be laying the broken window to me, because he had some animosity for me, for I knocked him down about a year ago. He began to abuse me in a way no decent woman could bear, and called me every name that was of destruction; and by reason that I'm a poor woman, and have a great deal of trouble with people, that gives me an unfortunate temper, I'm azy angered. My blood was up, and my heart warm, and there would be a barrel of turpids handy by, and I took up one, as if going to hit him, and as true as I have a soul to save, I'd a smashed his head with it, if it had not been for the course of the lah, that I know'd would be agin me, if I did it. There, that's the whole truth, and now I must go, or I shall be too late for the Lowell cars.

Mag.—Not just yet—that question is not quite settled. If there were any defect in the evidence, your conduct here to-day would fully supply it; but if we had any certainty that you would actually go directly to Lowell, we might suspend the sentence.

Witness—The clerk at the ticket office would not let her go in the cars yesterday—she has made two disturbances there already.

Eliz.—I have money to pay for my ticket, and I will have one—my money is as good as any body's—I want to get back to my other orphans, in Lowell.

Witness—She has no other child than the one by her side now.

Eliz.—How do you know how many children I have had, ye lying thafe! Ye're no man, ye coward, to stand up here and testify agin a poor lone woman, that's got niver anny one to speak in her defence; but I'll have my work on ye yet, if it's a twelvemonth to come. So now jidge, you may do as you like if you please.

Thus favored with her gracious permission, so unexpectedly granted, his honor descended her to the House of Correction for three months, to which she replied, "You may jist as well take and hang me!"

A fire broke out at the same time in the direction of West Cambridge, which we understand was a Rope-Walk.

An additional article to the Treaty of Limits between the United States and Mexico, was agreed upon on the 3d of April 1835, by our agent, Mr Butler, and the Mexican Ministry, and the ratifications were exchanged at Washington last week. The convention in question is now published, and it is to this effect—that within the space of a year, each party shall appoint a Commissioner and Surveyor to fix precisely the dividing line, and establish the limits of the Sabine to the Red River, and from the Red River to the River Arkansas, ascertaining the latitude of the source of the latter river, and running the line of latitude 42° to the South Sea.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

An unclaimed Deposit.—Our readers may remember that a very extensive robbery was committed, some time ago, at the London custom house. The perpetrators of this theft have been discovered and arrested in England, and are now in Newgate, awaiting their trial. One of these men, named Sullivan, it appears, came to this country, very soon after the robbery, and stayed a short time at Philadelphia, living with his mother and sister in a respectable hotel. While there he was engaged in a bank robbery, and had to decamp with great precipitation; and he says his departure was so hasty that he left behind him a sum of nearly twenty-five thousand dollars, which he had deposited in one of the banks, where it still remains.
